

STREET ACCIDENT CAUSES RUN ON A PRIVATE BANK

Horse Knocks Down Little Girl
In Front of Williamsburg
Financial Institution.

CROWD GATHERS THERE

Depositors See That, and Riot
Almost Results From Frantic
Clamor for Money.

While the vicinity of Graham avenue and Siegel street, in the heart of the foreign section of Williamsburg, was filled with thousands of homegoers early last night, a little girl started across the street. A light delivery wagon, moving slowly, struck her and knocked her down.

The child was uninjured, but the excited mothers of the neighborhood made a rush for the driver, who leaped from his wagon and fled into the private banking house of Abraham L. Kaas, at the corner.

Policeman Mosk of the Stagg street station was summoned and had to use all his power of persuasion to convince the women that the girl was uninjured and that the driver was blameless. After an hour, during which hundreds of persons crowded around the banking house, the policeman was able to escort the driver to his wagon and permit him to drive away. The child scampered home.

The sight of the hundreds of persons about the bank started wild rumors in the district. Men and women passing on cars believed there was a "run" on the bank. Many of them hurried home, got their bank books and sped back to their bank to demand their money.

CROWD OF EXCITED DEPOSITORS GATHER QUICKLY.

The rumors about the bank spread swiftly, and by 7 o'clock last night there were two hundred fighting men and women around the bank, each seeking to be first into line to the paying teller's window. The crush became so great that Graham avenue cars were tied up and street traffic delayed.

Mr. Kaas and several of his conservative friends tried to allay the fears of the depositors, but without avail, and when the bank was closed for the night, at the usual hour of 9 P. M., there was almost a riot on the part of those who had been unable to withdraw their savings. Mr. Kaas insisted to all that he had more than enough money to meet all demands, and that the bank would reopen at the usual hour—7 o'clock—this morning.

As early as 6.30 there were a hundred men and women about the bank this morning, each holding a bankbook. Promptly at 7 o'clock the doors of the bank opened and Mr. Kaas and his assistants began meeting every check presented by the window of the bank, protected by an iron grating. Mr. Kaas had piled several large bars of gold and silver, together with large bundles of green and yellow bank bills, to prove to the nervous depositors that he had plenty of money.

Conservative members of the district circulated through the crowd trying to explain the matter, but to no avail. By 8 o'clock the crowd had increased to 300, and the scene so nearly approximated a riot that Capt. Tracy of the Stagg street station sent fifteen reserves under Lieut. Leonhardt to preserve order.

When the policemen arrived they found the depositors fighting and screaming to get into the bank, and the line had extended across Graham avenue, stopping street cars and vehicles. The police, as gently as possible, got the line straightened out so that traffic might resume, and kept order, but the depositors continued clamoring for their money. As fast as the clerks could count it out they were paid.

"I have been banking among these people for thirty years," said Mr. Kaas to an Evening World reporter, "and I have come to know that such foolish runs as this are to be expected now and then."

"I have here in cash more than my capital stock and can pay out every claim to-day, if necessary. But it will not be necessary. In a little while the people will learn how foolish this run is, and then they will bring their money back."

In addition to the Williamsburg branch, the headquarters of the Kaas banks is in Essex street, Manhattan, with other branches in Madison avenue and in Harlem.

What one mother says:
Baltimore, Md., June 1, 1912.
My little girl's face was terrible to look at. She had such a severe case of eczema. At first she started to break out with pimples around her nose and mouth, and then they would open and run, and get into large sores. They would burn and itch her, and made her very restless at night. I tried several remedies, but the sores did not heal, but got worse. I washed the sores with Resinol Soap and then put on Resinol Ointment. The first time I used it it gave relief, and in a week's time you could hardly tell that she had had a sore on her face. She is now completely cured. (Signed) Mrs. J. Hammer, 2011 Wilkins St.
